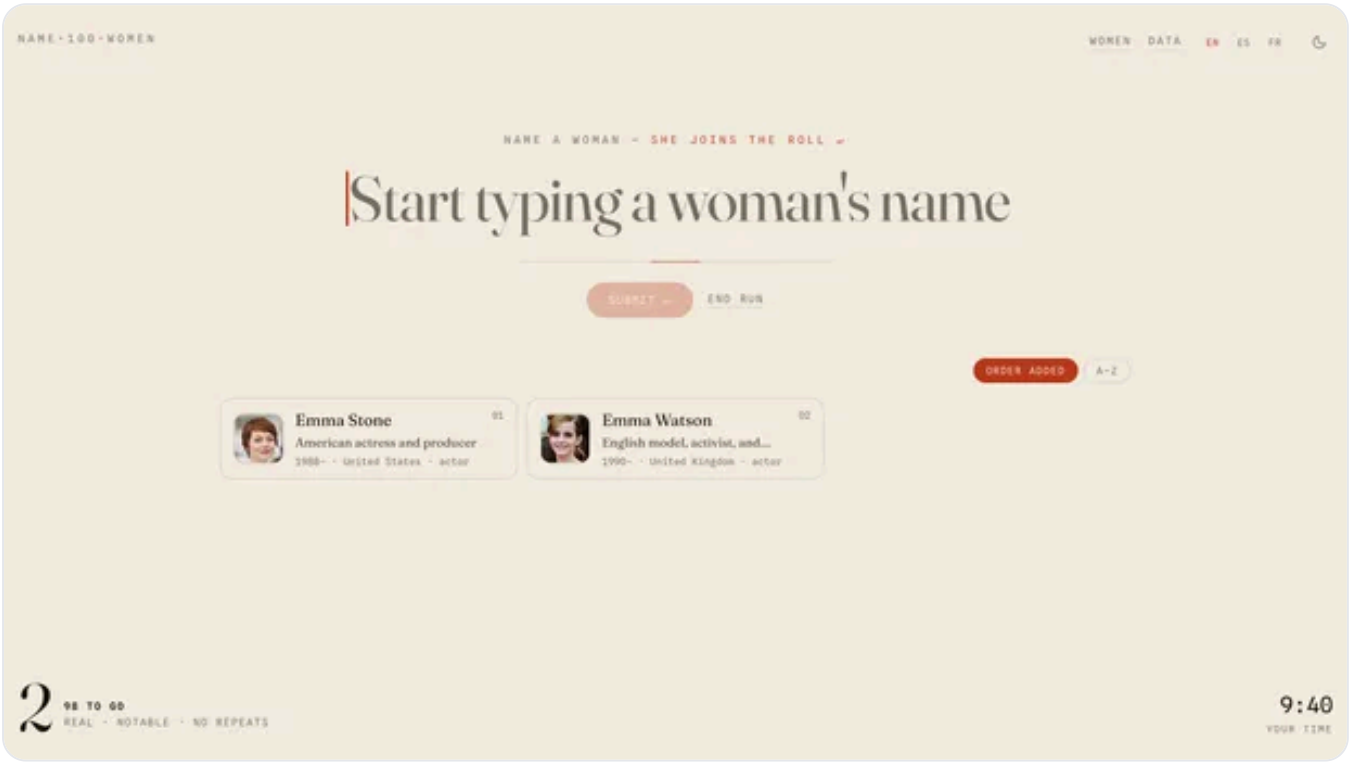
Name 100 Women

A live name-100-women challenge where you race the clock, enter real notable women, and try to reach 100 without repeats.



About

Name 100 Women is a name 100 women challenge that turns women's recognition into a fast, live typing game. You start with the cursor already focused, type a woman's name, and the timer begins only after your first valid entry. The site checks each submission in real time, only accepts real notable women, rejects repeats, and keeps a running count as you work toward 100. It is free to play, requires no account, and includes a built-in way to stop, review your stats, and share the result of a run.

What is Name 100 Women

Name 100 Women is a name 100 women challenge built for quick, browser-based play. The premise is simple: see how many real, notable women you can name before the clock gets the better of you. The game became popular through Twitch and TikTok-style challenge culture, where streamers and viewers tried to push their lists further under pressure.

The app frames the task as both a game and a visibility exercise. Instead of typing random answers, you are asked to name women who are real, not fictional, and not repeated. That makes the name 100 women format feel closer to a live knowledge test than a score-only arcade game.

A few things define the experience:

- It is free to use.
- No sign-up is required.
- The input is ready immediately, so you can begin without navigating menus.
- The challenge is centered on real-time fact checking and a running total.

Key features

The main feature set is narrow, but that is part of the appeal of a good name 100 women challenge. The app focuses on speed, recognition, and a clean run loop rather than on menus or account systems.

- Live validation: each submitted name is checked as you play, so the game can decide whether a woman counts.
- Timer on first valid entry: the clock does not start until you submit a correct name, which removes pressure during the first pause.
- No repeats: once you name someone, you cannot use her again.
- Real women only: fictional characters and duplicate entries are not accepted.
- Progress tracking: the interface shows how many women you still need to reach 100.
- End-of-run stats: you can stop whenever you want and see how you did.
- Shareability: the site includes a way to share your result, which fits the viral name 100 women format.

How to use it

Playing the name 100 women challenge takes only a few steps.

- Open the site in your browser.
- Start typing a woman's name right away; the cursor is already focused.

- Keep going as the app confirms valid entries and updates your count.
- Watch the timer begin after your first valid submission.

A few practical tips make the name 100 women run smoother:

- Use full names when possible, especially for widely known figures.
- Avoid fictional names, since the game is looking for real women.
- If you get stuck, use the suggested examples as a memory prompt.
- Treat the experience like a sprint: the list can dry up fast once the obvious names are gone.

Because it is a browser game, the flow is intentionally minimal. The fastest way to play the name 100 women challenge is to keep your fingers on the keyboard and avoid overthinking each entry.

Who it is for

This name 100 women challenge is a good fit for players who like quick tests, trivia-adjacent games, and social media challenges. It is especially suited to people who enjoy watching or joining stream-friendly formats where the goal is less about winning a prize and more about seeing how far you can get under pressure.

It may appeal to:

- Twitch and TikTok viewers who know the original challenge.

- Teachers or students looking for a discussion starter around representation and memory.
- Anyone who wants a short, free browser game with no account barrier.

The app also has an educational angle. The list of names is not just a score path; it becomes a reminder of how many women deserve to be remembered in culture, history, science, sports, and the arts.

What to know before you use it

The name 100 women challenge is fun, but it has a few real limits.

- It is not an official historical database, so it should not be used as a source of record for biographical research.
- “Notable” is context-dependent, so some names may be accepted or rejected based on the app’s own checks.
- The game favors recognizable public figures more than obscure or highly local examples.
- If you are verifying a person for school, publishing, or formal research, use an official or primary source instead of relying on the game’s acceptance result.
- The challenge is intentionally repetitive in structure: you type, the app checks, and the run continues. If you want deeper profiles or curated reading, this is not that tool.

For casual play, though, that simplicity is the point. Name 100 Women keeps the name 100 women challenge focused on recall, pace, and visibility, which is why it works well as a short session and a shareable screen recording.
